I. ABOUT THE BLOG

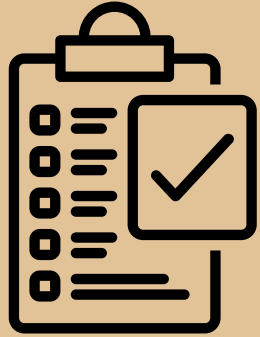

The NLIU Blog of Law & Gender Justice is an academic initiative of the Gender Justice Cell (GJC) at NLIU Bhopal, dedicated to providing a dynamic platform for exploring the intricate relationship between Law and Gender studies. Our blog serves as a crucial intersection where legal scholarship meets gender discourse, contributing to the broader effort of addressing contemporary challenges in gender justice and equality.

Established with the vision of fostering academic dialogue and research, we aim to develop accessible understanding of gender-related legal issues through various perspectives. The blog creates a space where the complexities of gender studies, encompassing individuals rights and perspectives – are examined through a legal lens.

We warmly welcome contributions from scholars, practitioners, students, and advocates who share our vision of a more equitable legal system. By bringing together diverse perspectives and insights, we aim to create meaningful discussions that challenge traditional legal paradigms and promote gender-sensitive approaches to law. We invite you to explore our published works and consider adding your voice to this important conversation, helping us build a more inclusive and just legal discourse.
